			Activity Name:	Working with parents who have had their children removed
			Learning outcomes	 Outline how practitioners can remain curious to the complexities that have affected the parenting of disadvantaged clients and work in engaging and non stigmatising ways. Discuss how practitioners can build trust with parents that will enable open and honest conversations about how parents might improve their ability to support the social and emotional wellbeing and safety of infants and children who have been removed. Identify examples of what practitioners can do to ensure that their own moral judgments don't interfere with their ability to have curious and non-stigmatising conversations with parents of children who have been removed. Illustrate examples of how children can still be motivators for change in parents,
